DO NOT VOTE

The fair sex, which chiefly constitute our customers, do not vote. Therefore on election day they have the time to come away and gaze upon the great display we have in every line; the paper for the wall, so gay; the carpets, on the floor to lay, and curtains very fine.

If they did vote, and the question was where can these things be had in the greatest variety, combined in harmony of effects, which long experience produces, we are sure that every ballot would read

An Assignment Set Aside.
Judge Gresham yesterday, in the United States Court, concluded the hearing of arguments in the Brush Electric Company vs. the Fort Wayne Electric Company. He also rendered a decree in the case of the Woonsocket Rubber Company vs. Failey & Hoos, of Lafayette, in favor of plaintiffs. Owing to failure in business defendants made an assignment, it is alleged, in favor of certain creditors. The assignment was set aside, and the master in chancery directed to treat all creditors alike.

Thinks a Great Deal of the City.
M. Phillipsborn, the traveling man, who, during the fire at the Bates House threw about $5,000 worth of cloaks out of the window, samples of the house he represents, is delighted with Indianapolis. He expected to lose some, but though they were carried away by many different persons, all of whom were strangers to him, not a cloak was lost or stolen. He is of opinion that the people of Indianapolis are the most honest folks on earth.

THE INDIANA LOYAL LEGION

A Number of New Members Admitted to the Ranks of the State Commandery.

After Disposing of Business, a Banquet Is Spread and Discussed, with Accompaniment of Stirring, Eloquent Speeches.

The Loyal Legion, Commandery of Indiana, held a stated meeting at the Bates House, and, after a brief business session, spent a highly enjoyable evening in which a banquet served as the vehicle for a season of song and story, blended with speeches from a number of new and several old members. The following gentlemen were made companions in the first class by reason of service in the Union army:

James M. Bradshaw, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Volunteers.
Thomas J. Charlton, late second lieutenant, Twenty-second Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Junius E. Cravens, late captain, One-hundred-and-twenty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Samuel L. Ensminger, late first lieutenant, Eleventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
James G. W. Hardy, late second lieutenant, Eleventh Indiana Cavalry.

Henry H. Hyatt, late first lieutenant and adjutant, Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Robert B. Jessup, late major and surgeon, Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Fleasant C. McGannon, late captain, Sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

Harvey H. Miller, late second lieutenant, Twentieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Thomas A. Morris, late captain, Twenty-eighth United States colored troops.

Wm. F. Shelly, late captain, One-hundred-and-forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Joseph M. Story, late captain, Twenty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

Green V. Woolen, late assistant surgeon, Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry.
Stephen J. Young, late surgeon, Seventy-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.
John A. White, late first lieutenant and adjutant, One-hundred-and-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry.

For the 2nd class by inheritance, Matthew J. Haines, eldest son of Surgeon Abraham B. Haines, One-hundred-and-forty-seventh Indiana Infantry, and Allen W. Hendricks, eldest son of Abraham W. Hendricks, major and paymaster of United States volunteers, were also elected and admitted.

Reed M. L. Haines was immediately elected chaplain, to take the place of Maj. Will Cumback, who is unable to attend the meetings.

The paper of the evening, "Recollections of Civil War in Missouri in 1861," was read by Maj. M. L. Bundy, of New Castle.

Sixty companions were seated at the table for supper, with Gen. Lew Wallace, of Crawfordsville, commander, at the head, and Lieut. B. B. Peck, of this city, secretary, at the foot. Judge W. Q. Gresham, of Crawfordsville, occupied the place of honor at the commander's right hand. After the table was cleared speeches were called for from the initiates, bringing forth a number of exceedingly happy responses.

Among those who spoke were Capt. W. M. Bradshaw, of this city; Lieut. Thomas J. Charlton, of Plainfield; Capt. John E. Cleand, Capt. Junius E. Cravens, of this city; Dr. Samuel L. Ensminger, of Crawfordsville; Lieut. James G. W. Hardy, of Lebanon; Lieut. Harvey H. Miller, of Huntington; Capt. Joseph O. Peilgo, of Lebanon; Capt. William F. Shelly, of New Castle; Capt. Joseph M. Story, of Franklin; Dr. Green V. Woolen, city; Dr. Stephen Young, Terre Haute. Judge Gresham spoke briefly as visiting member representing the Illinois Commandery.

Rev. M. L. Haines, when called upon, remarked: "One purpose of this commandery, as has been said, here again and again, is the cultivation of that friendship formed and cemented in the bloody days of war. But the purpose is broader and deeper than that. It is to keep memories alive; not revengeful memories, but that the war was for the worth fighting for and worth praying for. The memories that started up in the minds of those of you who fought and of those who are proud to be called your sons will be such to inspire a larger and nobler patriotism, and patriotism is a large section of true pity. God pity the man who cannot feel the sentiment of the times."

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land."

"The memories of the sacrifices and toils that were necessary to keep this land, and free it from the curse of slavery, ought to excite a larger and nobler patriotism. Another purpose that ought especially to be in the minds of us who are members by inheritance, is to obey the command of God's word, and give honor to whom honor is due. We owe everything, in a political way, to you men who saved us these God-given institutions."

Major Ostrander, of Richmond, was called upon for a speech. Looking along the banquet table and about the room, he said that it seemed as if the place was peopled with their comrades who had gone before, fallen upon the field of glory. "Was it yesterday," said the orator, "that your lusters climbed over the mountains of Tennessee, and stood waiting by the grim fruited guns to hear the rebel yell across the dull waters of the Chickamauga? Hero of many battles, for you the glory of a soldier's crown has risen with the sun, and if the angels whispered your promotion you go on sign, but eager as a bridegroom you swept in fiery valor on the foe and went through death to immortality. [This allusion to General Lee was warmly applauded.] You great heart—that led the storm hope at Vicksburg, and on the flying parapet put on the decoration of the great commander—you spotless knight found the holy grail under the midnight stars at Wagner, and poured into it the priceless blood of the new redemption. [Colonel Shaw, of the Fifty-seventh (Massachusetts), Prince of soldiers, your yearnings for the glory of the cavalry arm flashed in your sword strokes under the walls of Richmond (Phil Kearney), where the blind moles thought to hide the lustre of your reunion in the ignominy of a nameless grave. You—and you—kindred heroes, compassed the depths in the hell of fire at Spotsylvania, and came back to your Spartan mother on your shields. You peer of commanders, rest at Atlanta while a nation mourns (McPherson). You—how the line stretches out, your name is legion and your deeds countless as the sands of the sea—than kindly ransom, they grow with the years and live forever, the royal inheritance of the free. A grateful country honors at your shrine and does homage to your memory. But above and beyond the tribute that honor pays to daring, we remember by a thousand tokens that the bravest and the tenderest, and beside a soldier's campfire you find a soldier's welcome. They went out from among the living through the smoke of battle, and the smoke of battle, a quarter of a century ago, but when soldiers meet to tell of the stories of those days, and the flashing lights, surrounded by mirth, and song, and cheer, we feel the touch of a vanished hand, hear the sound of a voice that is stilled, and know with a faith beyond knowing that the unforgotten brave have come to sit in loyal companionship at our feast, and bridge the years with glorious memories." [Great applause.]

A number of patriotic songs were sung by the companions, led by Dr. Dan Thompson, following which came brief speeches by Dr. J. K. Wiest, of Richmond; Dr. J. L. Thompson, and Lieut. Stanton J. Peile. The legion then adjourned after singing "Auld Lang Syne." The organization now numbers 133 members.

They Accept the Rates.
The citizens of North Indianapolis held a meeting at the Udell Ladder Company's office, in North Indianapolis, last night, to consider the prices of the Indianapolis Natural Gas Company for that suburb. All those at the meeting were consumers, and resolutions were adopted extending a vote of thanks to Messrs. Udell and Schofield, proprietors of the plant, for the fact that they had taken in furnishing gas. The explanation of Mr. Fletcher to the committee was accepted, and he was fully exonerated from any connection in the matter. The present rates were accepted on condition that they shall continue.

Calling for Extra Help.
The Attorney-general yesterday received a communication from the Superintendent of Public Instruction stating that since the passage of the new text-book law the work in the offices of the county superintendents had been very heavy. One person is unable to perform the increased labor, and Superintendent LaFollette asked city Attorney-general's opinion as to how the county superintendents' expenses for additional clerk hire. The Attorney-general advised Superintendent LaFollette that if there is an indispensable necessity for the employment of a clerk in the office of the county superintendents, the county board should make the employment. No allowance can be made, however, on such account, unless the clerk's claim for compensation has been on file for ten days prior to the time at which it is proposed to obtain the allowance, so that any taxpayer may be afforded an opportunity to contest the claim.

A CANINE OBITUARY.
Deck Closes a Long Career of Devotion to Those Pursuits That Satisfied His Fancy.

Deck is dead. Deck was a dog and had had his day, but it was a day full of events, and he was a dog of character whose virtues are worth commemorating. Born of a long line of English setter ancestry he never, in his varied career, brought discredit upon a noble lineage. In his early years, true to inherited instinct and careful training, he was a mighty hunter; in the field his ambition was boundless, and his exploits are matters of admiring tradition. But it was not as a hunter that he gained most distinction. He was fond of sport, but ever seemed to regard it as unworthy occupation for a dog of his dignity. Other dogs might spend their lives in pursuing the fugitive bird; he was equal to a higher career. As a move in this direction he attached himself temporarily to the fire department, and "ran with the machine." This occupation had its fascinations, and to his latest hour the clang of the engine bell thrilled his aged frame, and brought a gleam to his eye; but it was not altogether a satisfying life. Gradually he drifted into newspaper circles, and there he found himself at home. For many years he had been a faithful contributor to the editorial staff, and was always faithful to his charge. Administrations might change, editors come and go, but Deck remained. As a matter of personal preference, and showing his intellectual turn he associated chiefly with the editorial staff.

This long continued association, combined with his native brain power, gradually endowed him with almost supernatural intelligence. The human characteristics that he displayed became more and more noticeable as he grew older. He possessed to a remarkable degree the journalistic instinct of "sizing a man up" at a glance. Until recently, when his faculties grew dull, his discrimination in this respect was truly marvelous. Of a natural amiable temper, he was kindly disposed to the majority of mankind, but the entrance of certain individuals roused him to a fury not easily quelled. It was a matter of common observation that such antipathies were usually well founded, though conventionalities forbade a display of similar sentiments by human members of the force. Such was Deck's sympathy with the moods of his companions, his adaptation to varied circumstances and surroundings, that it was the belief of those who knew him best that he could not be out of the power of speech to be equal to the best of them.

He was not a proud and haughty dog, but like his newspaper associates, was democratic, with a small "d," in his tastes, and chose his friends for their good qualities and not for their station in life. Like his journalistic companions, he held liberal and philosophic views, and was willing to ignore faults for the sake of the good traits possessed by those with whom he came in contact. He had many friends in all classes of society. Happy is the man who has as many to mourn his departure. He had many friends, but those whom he had known longest he loved best. Neither neglect nor separation could estrange him. He was faithful still. Of Bohemian tastes, and with the newspaper habit of being out of hours of day for his pastime, he was unfitted for domestic life, though many homes were open to him. Like all newspaper attaches he wanted to be where the world was moving, and see the wheels go round, and there he was to the end. "Grabbed ago" overtook him, rheumatism wrenched his joints, his eyes grew dim, his limbs grew stiff, and he was no longer able to follow his friends on whom he bestowed his special confidence.

But think, admitted to that equal sky. His faithful dog shall bear him company. Deck is dead, and those who knew him can only say, in his tribute to him who missed that good fortune: "Get a good dog, sir. You have a friend."

SUICIDE OF A SALOON-KEEPER.
Continued Ill Health Causes Anthony Bulach to Shoot Himself through the Head.

Anthony Bulach, a saloon-keeper on North Delaware street, committed suicide last night by shooting himself through the right temple with a 32-caliber revolver. He was partner in the old Wellacher saloon, and has lately been despondent, owing to ill health. On Sunday last he took to his bed, suffering from bronchitis. Mrs. Lewis Mohr, the mother of the suicide, stated to a Journal reporter that shortly after 7 o'clock last evening Bulach was lying on the bed, when suddenly he sprang up and exclaimed that he could not breathe. She turned to go down stairs for assistance when the report of a revolver rang out, and, turning, she saw her son, with the smoking revolver still in his right hand, fall to the floor, the blood running freely from a bullet-wound in his temple. Medical aid was summoned, but before help arrived the man was dead. Bulach has been a resident of this city for the past twenty years. Besides ill-health no cause can be given for the rash act, as inquiry showed his business affairs were in a normal condition. The relatives are very reticent about the matter, and up to a late hour last night, Coroner Wagner had not been notified.

Attended To by the Surgeon.
An elderly man was observed by a boy, last night at 12 o'clock, leaning against a post near the Thorpe Block, on Market street. Shortly afterwards he staggered backwards and fell headlong down the stone steps leading to basement of the building. Notice of the accident was given at police headquarters by officers Giblin and Thrash, who went to the place and found the man lying at the bottom of the steps. The officers carried the inanimate body to the police station, where it was ascertained, from a Grand Army badge he wore, that he is Lieut. L. F. Williams, of Reynolds. Dr. Jodges at police headquarters has arranged an examination, which proved that the injuries Williams had received were slight.

Shortly after midnight a young man walked into the Journal office, and leaned his head upon the counter. He was spoken to by an employee, who was astonished to see like man give a lurch backward and strike his head violently against the tile flooring, cutting a large gash. The patrol-wagon was sent for and the man taken to police headquarters, where his name was ascertained to be D. H. Shearer, of 126 West Maryland street. After having the wound dressed by Dr. Hodges, Shearer was able to walk home.
